IV. Affinity Group Partnership at Events

Nisha: I wanted to bring up how Mi Gente had their TNC this past weekend, and I wanted to start an open conversation about how affinity groups can communicate partnering for a event and what that/the spread of responsibilities would look like. I know people have been liking the diverse events and want to make sure that

Sarahi: it went really well but within the first hour, people came in and started tearing down the decor and they were confronted about it. people were coming for free alcohol but it got better later. It was a diverse crowd. We didnt know how to handle that situation since people were being very disrespectful

Nisha: as we're pushing to diversify the programs at CMC, we have to confront how to navigate these situations and make sure that all students feel comfortable at the events. Afrobeats is happening on green beach for reference. I think that is a discussion we should have when chris is here, but if anyone has any comments as well.

Kirby: hearing that is reminiscent of the montecarlo fundraiser last year (though maybe that was exacerbated because people could hide behind a anon platform)

Josh: Jonny was saying that he is worried about Pridefest this year and the messaging (this year donations are not mandatory)

Tori: I would say TNC this past week was chaotic in that only one EC was there and chris was out of town, so set up wasnt great. After set up, people left to go do work. I really do wish we were there for teardown. I didn't want Mi Gente to be alone like that and want to take preventative measures for next time

Sam: do you think the tearing down decor was because they were drunk or because of ill intention?

Sarahi: they definitely were drunk, but they were also mocking the dances (bachata etc), people were play fighting (and had to be stop) and were very confrontational, they felt like the space wasn't made for them. definitely a combo of many things

Gio: as we shift what the vocal cultures are on campus, we are naturally going to have a lot of pushback.

Desmond: do you have any sense of class year?

Sarahi: freshmen, likely? Karen might know some of them.

Desmond: its definitely a huge issue regardless, but the messaging can be different depending on who it is.

Tori: these are things we shouldnt have to discipline people for, but it be nice if there is something that we can do to show that its not okay

Josh: security can help in these cases

Sam: there's been a lot of abnormally wrong behavior happening this year. the write ups have been incredibly long this year. yes, we need to figure out how to move forward. this is definitely reflective of a much larger issue

Nisha: the montecarlo stuff was disgusting last year, we are going to have to think about how we will navigate people's discomfort. There will be some pushback with the removal of Toga, for example. we have to minimize the burden on affinity groups in planning and execution, but also making sure that we are putting marginalized students in a place where they will be harassed or triggered.

Josh: can students be banned from events?

Desmond: DOS can ban students from any event based on their conduct, if we ask dos to do it, im sure if there is good reason they would enforce that.

V. TNC Debrief

VI. Forum Questions

VII. Comprehensive Resource Platform

Aara: Having a comprehensive resource doc would be helpful– having hyperlinks to all the resources so it can all be together. One of the problems is that may stress out freshmen if they see this massive list over summer. would this be helpful, should it be catered towards freshmen?

Sarahi: last spring, a bunch of seniors made a cmc mini survivor guide catered to affinity members but it has a bunch of info (clubs, registration, med school, law school) and we were told to add on more. I can share that Aara: that'd be great, thank you.

JoIt would be helpful

Chad: it would be really helpful, particularly within that first week when there's a bunch of overlapping deadlines. Maybe if there's a sign on and is only available when we're here, but it really would be helpful.

Kimi: is there a hyperlink for accommodations?

Sam: there is.

Josh: there's a bunch of scattered hyperlinks.

Aara: ive spoken with maude too about how accessibility can be confusing as well. Maybe if its connected to the new student portal, that can be helpful
